

PRESS RELEASE - 19/02/09

A NEW TAKE ON CLASSIC TALES

Students from the BTEC National Performing Arts Pathway at Priestley College turned their talents to story telling as they showcased work to members of the public.

Adaptations of classic tales such as Romeo and Juliet, Taming of the Shrew and the Story of Creation from the Bible were reinacted with a modern slant, whilst another piece that was performed on the night looked at the serious issue of domestic violence.

The first year students acted in the production during an assessment that will make up part of their final grade.

On the night over 100 members of the public attended the performance which was just the latest in a string of hit productions.

Speaking with regard to the night, Lynsey Hicks a member of the Performing Arts team, commented, "It was a very good night and everybody enjoyed themselves – we hope to do it again in the future."

Photo

Students who performed in the piece based around the Story of Creation from The Bible.

Words & Picture by Nat Ashurst – February 2009

